

LINGUÆ LATINÆ

LIBER DICTIONARIUS Quadripartitus.

Dr. Adam Littleton's Latine Dictionary,

In Four Parts:

I. An English-Latine. III. A Latine-Proper.
II. A Latine-Classical. IV. A Latine-Barbarous.

REPRESENTING

I. The ENGLISH WORDS and PHRASES before the Latin; among which latter, no Word or Expression is admitted, but what is Classic, and of an approv'd Authority.

II. The LATIN-CLASSIC before the English; wherein Care is taken, that the Proper and Original Signification of each Word is set down, which is followed by those that are Derivative, Metaphorical or Remote.

III. The LATIN-PROPER NAMES of those Persons, People or Countries that frequently occur, or are any way Remarkable in Classic Authors, with Explications from their several Languages, and a short Account of them Historical and Geographical.

IV.
1. The LATIN-BARBAROUS, Explaining as well such Technical Words or Terms of Art, as are made necessary to us by the many Inventions and Discoveries not known to the Ancients, as those which crept into the Latin-Tongue during the Ignorance and Darkness of the Middle Ages.
2. The LAW-LATIN, comprehending those Words, which are made use of by the Common Lawyers in their particular Profession; very necessary for the understanding of Charters, &c.

The Fourth Edition,

Improved from the several Works of Stephens, Cooper, Holyoke, and a Large MS. in Three Volumes, of Mr. John Milton, &c. In the Use of all which, for greater Exactness, Recourse has always been had to the Authors themselves:

With Two MAPS; one of Italy, another of Old Rome.

LONDON: Printed for W. Rawlins, R. Chiswel, C. Harper, S. Sprint, J. Place, D. Midwinter, and T. Leigh. 1703.

D. A. Littleton PRÆFATIO.

Erudito Lectori S.

BArbarus merito cenſerer, utpote qui parum ex Romana fide agerem, ſi Te, Lector Erudite, ſub initiis hujuſce commentationis, quæ tota ferme in Latino ſermone explicando verſatur, aut inſalutatum præterirem, aut una cum popello vernacule compellarem. Te nimirum ſecundum Regem mihi Patronum advoco, Te operis Arbitrum volo. Non eſt quidem, quur mihi ad defenſionem Galeato Prologo opus eſſe exiſtimem, Auguſtæ Majeſtatis patrocinio clypeatus. Verum quum tam perverſi ſint mores ſeculi, ut optima quæque calumniæ notam vix effugere queant, & nonnullorum invidiam vel ipſa bene merendi voluntas commoveat; non erit mirum, ſi hic noſter in tenui labor, utut à laudabili conſilio profectus, non ſe ſatis omnibus ex omni parte probare norit. Neque deerunt forte, qui me pipilo diffient. Dicent me hominem Theologum alienam à munere meo perſonam induiſſe, qui, poſtquam Theologiæ nomen dederim, ad Grammaticorum rurſus ſubſellia provocem, & in Dictionariis conſcribillandis operam abutar. Porro nec ipſam rem eſſe uſque adeo neceſſariam, cum & plus ſatis ſuppetat hujus farinæ ſcriptorum, quibus juventur (dicam an diſtrahiantur) ſtudioſi, & ergo in hoc argumento nihil ſit quod afferam novi. De Me primum dicam, deinde de Re.

Ad Me quod attinet; ſi ſacris initiato non liceat in publicum conſulere, ſi homini mei ordinis juventuti prodeſſe, remp. literariam promovere nefas ſit; habent fatentem reum. In hunc ego ſcopum unice animum intendi, huc collimarunt cogitationes & curæ meæ omnes, hoc quantum in me erat per haſce temporis anguſtias & varias officiorum intercurſationes aliaque incommoda elaboravi. Quod ſi minus iſtum finem uſquequaque aſſecutus videar, ſiquando (quod humanitus fieri ſolet) ab iſtoc inſtituto aberrem; ignoſcet mihi ea, quæ pectoribus ſolida & genuina eruditione imbutis, & generoſo honeſto ineoctis ultro innaſcitur, humanitas. Nec illud tacendum, quod hiſce ſtudiis à prima adoleſcentia innutritus, poſt vicennalem demum, & quod excurrerat, operam in palæſtra Grammatica navatam, non omnino imparatus, nec rudis rerum, ſed probe exercitatus ad hanc provinciam acceſſerim. Quur enim me pudeat aut pœniteat, literas didiciſſe, vel etiam docuiſſe? Erat illa non minima Scholaſticæ inſtitutionis labes & corruptelarum in re Dictionaria ſcaturigo, homines Scholarum regimini inſuetos & in docendi methodo fere peregrinos, dum adulterina & ſubleſtæ fidei vocabula ſupponunt pro veris & legitimis; dum confuſaneos & tralatitios ſenſus vocibus affingunt; verbo, dum vetera errata cumulant novis; pueritiam noſtram ludibrio habitam in infinitos paſſim errores traduxiſſe. His ego malis, qua licuit, mederi volui, teſquis & dumetis aut runcinatis ſtirpitus aut collucatis, luxurioſa ſenſuum propagine reciſa & in nativum ordinem jugata, vitiiſque ſermonis, quæ per imperitiam vel incuriam irrepſerant, ſuas ſibi res habere juſſis: quod ſi minus præſtiterim, aperui ſaltem feneſtram aliis, qui meo exemplo edocti efficient aliquando, ut Linguæ Latinæ promptuarium quam purgatiſſimum prodeat.

Habeo aliquid ex me majus & majoris momenti, quanquam hoc ipſum, quod dixi modo, ſit maximi. Erit, ſi mihi bonus Deus vitæ ſpatium conceſſerit, ubi in alia divertar, ad quæ commodior, hoc Progymnaſmate qualitercunque peracto, dabitur tranſitus. In alto nimirum fundamenta locant, qui volunt extruere in altum. Adeo ſi meapte ſolius gratia hic labor à me ſuſceptus fuiſſet, erat haud pœnitendus.

Accedo jam ad ipſam Rem; cujus opportunitatem, ſi nihil aliud, vel ipſa ſcriptorum in hoc ipſo genere multitudo evicerit. Latine quidem doctis & in re literaria aliquouſque provectis proſpectum erat ſatis dudum in uno Calepino, cujus Compendium edidit Waſæus noſter conſilio non malo, eoque judicio, ut vix quidquam uſpiam in eo reperias, quod Barbariem reſipiat. Ille, Calepinus inquam, & ſincerius proponit voces, earumque ſignificata accuratius diſtinguit & rarius ea admiſcet monſtra & prodigia vocum, quam pleriq; qui eum ſecuti. De noſtratium pleriſq; ut loquar, alia res eſt. Aliud his conſilium, aliud fere inſtitutum; qui vocabula omnia undecunq; collecta, quomodocunq; corrupta & interpolata, in peculium Latinitatis tranſcripſerunt: perinde ac ſi moles librum non uſus commendaret. Qua de re nonnihil dico in Præfatione ad Gloſſarium. In hujus rei fidem unum allego Cooperum, qui uti præclaram æque ac fructuoſam operam locabat in explicanda puritate ſermonis ex idoneis auctoribus deſumpta; ita in reliquis adeſpotis miſere fallebat ſimul & fallebatur, ut nemo magis. Non jam ad alios deſcendo. Neq; enim aut aliena vituperare aut noſtra jactantius prædicare animus eſt. Quid à nobis præſtitum ſit, Alloquio ad Populares ſigillatim docemus. D. Goldmanno, qui mihi proxime præivit, (ſiquid ego novi hominem, dubium magiſne probum an eruditum ſenem, antiqua fide & moribus, atq; tum temporis, cum id negotii in ſe reciperet, Regiarum partium reum) non erat integrum facere quæ vellet; quippe qui ageret ex formula & præſcripto, uti loquuntur Jureconſulti; non quo vetera corrigeret, ſed adjiceret nova; magis adeo ut in quæſtum Soſiis, quam Lectoribus in commodum cederet grandius volumen.

Supereſt, ut rationem conſilii, quo Latino-barbara à Claſſicis ſecrevi, tibi, Lector Erudite, reddam; quod non feci aliquo novitatis obtentu (erat enim & veteris inſtituti) ſed ſerio & ex vero. Illud utique minime ferendum eſt, quod aliqui Latinitatis latifundium nulla maceria claudi, nullis limitibus coerceri patiantur; quinimo temere omnia civitate donari poſtulent, quæ vel infimæ notæ & ſequioris ævi ſcriptor aliquis proletarius uſurparit. Enimvero uti cives ipſi in cenſum venire & profiteri apud Prætorem debebant, ita & verborum delectus agendus eſt. Neq; tamen aut ſtricte nimis aut nimis laxe res hæc erat tentanda. De iis quæ florente Roma viguerunt, nemo eſt qui dubitet. Sed nec ea Claſſe ſecludi & loco moveri decebat, quæ vel veteribus, Accio puta, Pacuvio, Ennio, &c. in uſu erant, utut mox, ante Auguſtæum ſaltem ævum, in deſuetudinem abierint; quæ vel Plautus deridiculi gratia effinxit; vel quæ deniq; eruditorum uſus renaſcentibus literis adprobavit, aut etiam deinceps adprobaturus eſt. Grammaticis porro melioris notæ is honos habendus, ut quicquid illi adducunt etiam citra veterum auctoritatem, in Claſſe reponatur; adferunt enim ſuam, Reliqua in Gloſſarium merito releganda; in quo ſi diligentiam meam deſideras, quod non toto thylaco, quod aiunt diſſeverim; id ideo ſciens feci, quod jam plena meſſis, prout accepi, iſtiuſmodi vocabulorum ſudet ſub prælo Lutetiæ Pariſiorum.

Statueram aliquando adjunxiſſe huic operi Apparatum Philologicum, in quo exactiori trutina univerſa ſimul expenderem, ad certos Analogiæ canones redacta; quæ ſparſim tributa nimis longum fuiſſet ſingula ad id examen vocare. Verum quum ea res moram deſideraret, coactus ab eo cœpto deſiſtere in aliud tempus reſervo ſeorſim fortean, ubi vacabit, edendum.

Jam, mi Lector, iſtinc Civilitas, hinc Laſſitudo me admonet, ut finem faciam, quo uterque reſpiremus. Tu Vale, Fruere, Fave.

Dr. Littleton's PREFACE

TO

The English Reader.

THE Travail of this Work having been Undertaken and Performed mainly for thy sake, for the Common Benefit of my Country; I mean, for the Help and Advantage of Learners, though I hope too not altogether to the Dissatisfaction of the Learned: I judge I cannot acquit my Duty only in a Latine Address, wherein none but Scholars can be concerned; unless I do also in plain English give an account of my self, which may be understood by all. And here I shall not need to make an Historical Deduction of Dictionaries, the Use and Necessity whereof is unquestionable, as being one of the most considerable Instruments of Institution, if rightly prepared, and fairly applied to. Nor have I the Vanity or ill Nature to design my own Commendation by casting the least Disparagement or Reflection upon any of Those who have gone before us in Enterprises of this kind, to whose Labours and Diligence we rather willingly own an Obligation. But since it is free for any Man to deserve well of the Publick, it is but necessary, both as to Civility and Prudence, to lay before thee an account of the Work, what hath been done in it, (it being a Work of such a nature, that as it is intended for General Good, so it is subjected to every ones Particular Censure) that so seeing what is to be expected from it, thou mayst neither be too forward in censuring the Author, nor too backward in Valuing the Work.

In the main then I must tell thee, that though we do travel all along in the old beaten Road of Alphabet, that being the usual Method of such Books, and that which is most agreeable and easie to Youth, and no less conducive to their studies by speeding their Inquiries: Yet there is enough offered all along to the judgment of the severest Criticks, by continual Supplements, Amendments, and the like through all the Veins of the Work, what for matter, what for manner of handling it, as may abundantly justifie the Tenure of this Book to be as free from incroaching upon any others Copyhold, as any that has been writ in English of this kind since Thomasius his time.

To this end it hath been our great Aim, to carry the purity of the Latine Tongue throughout, and consequently our no less Care, not to take things or words upon trust, so as to transcribe others mistakes, and (as it happens in all Traditionary Knowledge) to add our own to them. Wherefore where we could have the opportunity of more certain Information from the Authors themselves, we have not spared our pains in applying to them, where That was wanting, we held our selves bound to name Those, who have vouched their Authority.

Further, whereas there have not been wanting some, who have thought it the greatest credit of their Labours, the more Words they could amass together, however they came by them; as we do not envy those of that design their due esteem, so we may withal affirm, that for this, which they account a Master-piece, to wit, for variety of Collections, and number of true current Words, This present Work in all its Parts doth not yield to any Former.

And for this which hath been said in the General, I humbly refer my self to any unprejudiced Reader, who shall give himself the trouble of comparing what is here done, with what has been before. But this is not all the Business we are to speak to, as will appear in the Character and Lineaments of the Particular Pieces severally.

In

In the English-Latine Dictionary; having consider'd the Improvements of our Language, since Reverend Cooper's time, both as to the Inlarging and to the Refining of it, we have endeavoured to lay down the whole Body of it as now spoken, and to fit it, as well as we might, all over with a suitable Latine Habit. Hereupon several thousands of Words and Proprieties formerly wanting are here set down.

The several Notions and Importances of words are distinctly and orderly reckoned up, as near as may be, according to the Method of their Natural Dependence; especially those of Verbs, as they are variously applied; and that either as they stand alone, or as they draw after them little Particles, in, out, on, off, up, down, &c. which is the English way of Composition, wherein no small Assistance hath been afforded us by the Reverend Dr. Lloyd, Dean of Bangor, in his Philosophical Dictionary at the end of Bishop Wilkins his Universal Character.

The Idiotisms and Proprieties of Speech, which by standing at that distance they do from Latine, are so apt to puzzle Youth, and the Particles, wherein the Elegance and Difficulty of most Languages mainly lies, have been much enlarged; to which, besides our own Observation, we had here and there some help from Mr. Walker's Treatise on those Subjects, and might have had much more, but that we saw the Work would by that means have grown too big upon us.

To make room for such useful Additions and necessary Supplies for our present occasion of Discourse, we thought it not so much Injury to our Grandfathers, as Advantage to our Children, to lay aside some old-fashioned Words, now grown out of all use; such as Abastick, &c. and to discard many uncouth Expressions and insignificant Circumlocutions; as The inward top of the finger next to the Nail, and the like: Though of the old Words too we have retained as many at least, as do really belong to the English Stock.

The Names of Herbs, Trees, Stones, Beasts, Birds and Fishes, &c. we have by Retail distributed into the common Alphabet; remembring we are not now upon a Nomenclature, which reduces Things under their Heads, but a Dictionary, which marshals Words by order of Letters.

Lastly, For distinction sake, Terms of Law, Physick, Navigation, Architecture, Heraldry, and others of uncommon use are marked with a Cross; thus †. And those that are of an immediate descent from the Latine, with a Star; thus *.

In the Latine-Classick, besides the Etymology, Signification, and Use of each Word, (to which three Heads the whole nature of Speech well-near is reduced) besides this some other things are done, which took up some time and thought too, though at first they might be look'd on as slight Instances: As namely,

That the kind and quality of the Word, whether Noun, Verb, &c. is every where almost set down.

That the Hebrew has been continued through the whole Work.

That Primitives, as the leading words, are put into Capitals for honors sake.

That where the English Word comes from the Latine, which it expounds, it is put into the black English Letter.

That Words manifestly taken out of the Greek, especially if they retain their declining too, are noted with an Asterisk *. And that words Obsolete, to be met with only in the Rubbish of antient Writers, and Terms peculiar to particular Sciences, though used by approved Authors, yet as not fit for School-use, are marked with an Obelisk †.

These things, as they will, we presume, be helpful to the younger sort; so will not, we hope, give offence to those who need not such Remarks.

But then as to the more serious concern. In giving the Etymons, wherein we have been obliged to be the larger by others Example rather than our own Judgment, (that being look'd on as a point of Skill, wherein both old Grammarians and late Criticks have taken so much pains) we have endeavour'd to be close and pertinent; as resolving no great matter of Learning to lie in forc'd and affected Derivations, unless they may be brought to some true measures of Analogy.

The

The Significations of Words are adjusted, as near as might be, to the present English Expression, and deduced orderly along; beginning either with that which is the most natural and proper Importance, or with that which is the most ordinary and common.

The Use, more especially of Verbs, is represented in such pertinent Instances, as to shew at once their Grammatical Construction and Government, together with the Latine Propriety or Phrase.

Another help to find out the true value and force of words being the observation of Synonyma's (i. e. words of a like sense) and Antitheta's (i. e. words of a contrary meaning) Those are here noted with peculiar marks, the former thus ; =: the latter thus ; ⁂.

In the Latine-Proper we have so handled History, Poetick Fiction, and Geography, as to confine them, what we might, though overborn with Precedents, even down from Stephanus himself, (out of whom the rest have taken most of theirs) within the compass of Latine Classick Writers, unless the matter it self were any where so considerable, as to give some instance of useful or delightful Knowledge. Wherefore we have cashiered hence many Names mentioned only by Greek Writers, Herodotus, Pausanias, Suidas, &c. and many of them only mentioned; to put things of more use in their room. For those Persons and Places, that are of any Eminence and Note, Hebrew or Greek as well as Roman, we have taken notice of, and given some of them the respect of Capital Letters.

The English Stories, which are up and down large, and are in many Schools made use of for Dictamens, having been taken out of Eliot and Cooper, and continued in that old-fashioned Language, we have here all there amended and somewhat refined by bringing them nearer to our present dress.

Where we found it necessary, we have given the Gender and the Genitive Case, as knowing by experience that Children are often more at a loss in declining a Noun Proper than Common.

In the Geographical Part special care hath been taken of bringing the Modern Names to those used by the Ancients and Romans; and these latter most of them in a compleat List returned back again, the English before the Latine, after the English-Latine Dictionary.

For the Glossary or Latine-Barbarous Words we have already given an account to our Learned Reader; nor can any right-bred Latinist take offence to see them thrown into a Lay-stall by themselves. For how hard soever it may be to set the Boundaries of the Roman Language; yet it is, we are assured, as possible to distinguish words Classical from those that are not such, as it is necessary for Youth that they should be so distinguished.

Herein we bestow many such words as our Glosses have help us to; such as by mispelling, or other mistakes even of Dictionary-makers themselves, have served only to swell the bulk of our common Dictionaries: of which we have more at large discoursed in the Preface before the Glossary.

Moreover, those terms which have been either devised or coined out of the Latine, Greek, or Vulgar Tongues by Schoolmen, Civilians, Physicians, &c. of later times and meaner note are ranked here (for to the more eminent of these we allow a place in the Class) unless they are grown to be of common use, and have some more than ordinary importance.

As to the Chymical terms of Paracelsus (which have formerly pestered Latinity) and other strange words used by Men of his Tribe, which have no Affinity with Latine or Greek, they are wholly omitted, and not so much as set down among the Barbarous.

Nor is this Omission any disadvantage at all to the Latine Tongue, with which such Writers have little to do in those Adventures; who also, if they intend to be understood, have provided Claves and Keys of their own, whereby their Readers may understand them. Nor ought it to be imputed as a blemish or defect to a Dictionary, that the Writer thereof did not think fit to rake up all the Gibrish, that any sort of Canters have invented to amuse People, and to conceal their own Notions.

Let it suffice thee, Reader, that thou hast here the whole body of the Latine Tongue, with all its natural and genuine branches, delivered to thee; whereby thou mayst be inabled to speak and

write Latine by the same Authority as the Romans themselves spoke and wrote it, when Rome was at her height.h. For as to those words, which thou missest here, and meetest with elsewhere, thou must know that they being but Corruptions and Abuses of Latine, are better let alone than taken notice of.

In the last place; the better to acquaint thee with Roman Antiquity and History, I have furnished thee with some small helps by themselves; viz.

The Description of old Italy and Rome, as well as so narrow a Page could present them. Their Kalendar with their Feasts, Games, &c.

A brief account of their Weights, Coins, and Measures.

Together with the Abbreviatures used by the Ancient Romans in their Inscriptions and Monuments.

Amongst other things added to this Work, thou hast a brief Abstract of our Common-Law-Terms; wherein I must beg the favour of all the Gentlemen of that Honourable Profession to believe I had not the least design of exposing their Mystery; but only to give some small assistance to the younger Students, who shall light upon this Book. They are words that having been derived to us down from Britans, Saxons, Danes, Normans, in ancient Deeds, Charters, and other Records, &c. have become necessary to the understanding and practice of our Municipal Laws; and though many of them appear to be and indeed are Barbarous, yet they are such as require great knowledge to explain them: witness the Writings of learned Spelman, Cowel, and others upon them. And to speak my deepest Resentments, that Duty I owe to my Worthy Progenitor who wrote the Tenures, was alone of force enough to have kept me from any disingenuous Reflections upon those skills, of which he hath been always acknowledged to have been so able a Master.

Reader, I have, as I promised thee in the beginning, given thee an Account of my Intendments and Endeavours in this performance; and if it hath (as I am too conscious to my self it often hath) hapned, that I have any where failed of my design; if in a long and tedious Work I have through inadvertency, streights of time, and hurry sometimes of other business, made any balk, and committed mistakes, let thy Humanity excuse the humane Infirmities of

THE PREFACE OF THE IMPROVERS and EDITORS OF THE Present EDITION.

THIS not the Design of the Prefacers to spend their own pains or the Readers time in enlarging upon the Necessity and Usefulness of Books of this nature, as well to Learners as the Learned. That's a Subject which has been sufficiently spoken to by our Reverend and Learned Predecessors in such Labours as these, in the Prefaces before their several great and useful Performances; to which the Reader may have recourse for satisfaction in this matter, if he still wants it. Nor do we account it a fair thing, but on the contrary vain and ill-natur'd, how common soever the Practice of the world may have made it, to attempt the raising and establishment of our own Reputation, by debasing or shaking that of others, who before us have bestow'd their Time and Labours upon this Subject. Our Sentiment is, That all Men ought to rise at the mention of their Names and Memories, in order to their paying them that just Veneration they have deserved for their Laborious Industry; by which tho many have been, daily are, and for the future may and will be improv'd in their Knowledge; yet none can be throughly sensible of those Mens great Travail, but such as have either accompany'd or followed them in the same Road.

But tho we own all imaginable deference to be due to Enterprizers of this kind, yet withal we could not but think both this sort of Learning to be capable of many farther Improvements, and our selves likewise not wholly incapable of contributing to such a Performance. Few human Works can be accounted perfect and compleat, and fewer of this large and comprehensive nature, where the Reader is to expect a Collection of the whole Body of two Copious Languages, the English and Roman. To the former of which Tongues, because of those Changes made in it, and Additions to it, by our disuse of many words in vogue with our Great-Grandfathers, and by our naturalizing so fast, as we do, several Phrases and Terms of Art, imported from Italy, Spain, and most especially France; that Character seems very suitable, which Horace has given of the Latter,

Multa renascentur, quæ jam cecidere: cadentque
Quæ nunc sunt in honore vocabula,
si volet usus;
Quem penes arbitrium est, & jus,
& norma loquendi.

If then our own Language does in this manner both vary and improve, Collectors of Words and Phrases ought doubtless to keep pace with these Variations and Improvements, by noting and publishing as well its Decays in some Instances, as its Advancemans in others. And as to the Latine Tongue, when 'tis consider'd, that the Purity and Idiom of that Language is to be pickt up out of many antient Authors, whose Expressions must be diligently compar'd, before they can be throughly understood; that most of these Authors have been both restor'd in many places from the authority of the MSS. of the best Note, and the obscurer passages in them illustrated and interpreted by Learned Men; and lastly, that very much of this great Work has been done, even since many of our Dictionaries were compiled: it can't, we think, be well deny'd, that as there was great need of such Improvements, so the Helps for that Performance were not few, provided a suitable Diligence and Skill were apply'd in bringing them together. 'Tis this we pretend to in the following Work, and in this Preface to it, design to give an account both of our Assistances; and the Method we have used in their Application, by speaking distinctly to its several parts, in the same order they lie before the Reader.

In the English-Latine part of this Work, we must acknowledg our selves to have been very much assisted by the extraordinary Pains of the Reverend and Learned Dr. Littleton; whose unwearied Industry in compiling that Part of his Work, when compar'd with the Travails of others who had troden in the same path before him, will certainly appear as far superiour to them all, as he has exceeded them in exactness of Method and Skill. Some Authors, in their Prefaces, are usually too large, very often partial, and sometimes even immodest in the accounts they give of their own Achievements. Nothing of all which can be charged on the Doctor, to whom we are bound to do this right, by declaring to the World, that we find him to have done more in that Alphabet, than he has mentioned as done in his Preface. And we may be said to have a competency of judging in this case, when the Reader is assured that we have not only read, but weigh'd and consider'd every Line and Word in that whole Collection. But as we own our selves beholden to him for his Assistance, so we doubt not but, on comparing both Performances, the Reader will find very many Enlargements and Improvements in this we now put into his hands, throughout all its distinct Members and Parts. For we have inserted several whole Classes of Words, which had been either omitted before, or were very lately introduced into our Language. We have been more exact, more distinct and full, in noting the various significations of Verbs as well as Nouns, both those that are Simple and stand alone, and them that occur in our English manner of Composition; which in Nouns is very usual, by our tacking two of them together, ther, as in Corn-loft, Huntſ-man, &c. and in Verbs, by adding ſome of our Particles, ſuch as are on, off, &c. to the ends of them. We have pickt up very many Terms of Art, uſed in Trade, Law, Sea-affairs, Phyſic, Building, Heraldry, &c. which were never taken notice of before in a Work of this nature. We have been very careful in gathering up the Idioms and Proprieties of our Language, and in noting the Particles; which in our Tongue are very numerous, and in the Underſtanding and Application whereof conſiſts the Difficulty as well as Expreſſiveneſs and Elegance, not only of the Engliſh, but of all other Languages alſo that we have any knowledg in. And it has been no ſmall part of our Care and Pains throughout this whole Engliſh-Latine Dictionary, not only to put our Additions and Inſertions into proper Latine Words and Phraſes, but to make numerous Alterations alſo in thoſe of both ſorts which we found collected, by clothing them in a neater, that is, a more antient Roman garb. Beſides our own private Collections, as well from the Books we perus'd, as by Enquiry of and Converſe with Perſons well skill'd in the Terms of their ſeveral Arts, Sciences and Trades; the Authors we have been chiefly aſſiſted by were theſe, Sir Henry Spelman's Gloſſary, Somner's Saxon Dictionary, Dr. Cowel's Interpreter, Terms of the Law, The Seaman's Dictionary, Skinner, The Right Reverend Dr. Lloyd, now Biſhop of Worceſter, his Philoſophic Dictionary, Mr. Walker's Book of Particles, &c. which Works being generally alphabetical, were conſulted and compar'd with as much eaſe, as with Diligence excerpt. Our Method could not be other than that of Alphabet, the receiv'd one of all Works of this kind, both for its Agreeableneſs, and for the Eaſe and Speed of the Enquirer. Laſtly, that our Reader might know Terms of Navigation, Law, &c. we have continued Dr. Littleton's diſtinction of them by a Croſs, thus †; as likewiſe thoſe Words derived from the Latine, by an Aſterisk, in this manner *.

The Latin-Claſſic part of this Work is next to be ſpoken to, wherein as the Defects were more numerous than in the Engliſh-Latine, and the Uſefulneſs of it greater, eſpecially to Learners, whoſe Advantage was chiefly aim'd at in this Undertaking; ſo more Labour and Skill was requir'd to ſupply the one, and render the other more compleat. We deſign to acquaint the Reader in few words, whence we had our Materials for making the Improvement in this part of the Work we pretend to, and in what Method we have diſpoſed them for his Uſe and Advantage. We began our Collection by a careful peruſal of ſeveral Authors, as Lucretius, Terence, Cæſar, Phædrus, Gratius, Petronius, &c. ſome of whom, we obſerv'd, had ſcarce been nam'd, or (if ſometimes quoted) often to very little, and ſometimes to very bad purpoſes, in Dictionaries of this Volume. For in reading over theſe Authors, we met with ſeveral Words, with many Significations of words, and with more Conſtructions of them, whereof no Latin-Engliſh Dictionary before this had made any mention. Secondly, Robert Stephens's Latine Theſaurus, the ſecond Edition of it, (a Work which all the Learned will own to be the compleateſt of this kind that is extant) and Thingius his Additions to him lay always before us, whom we conſtantly conſulted with all that Application and Skill we were Maſters of. Thirdly, we had by us and made uſe of, a Manuſcript Collection in three Large Folio's digested into an Alphabetical Order, which the Learned Mr. John Milton had made, out of Tully, Livy, Cæsar, Sallust, Quintus Curtius, Justin, Plautus, Terence, Lucretius, Virgil, Horace, Ovid, Manilius, Celsus, Columella, Varro, Cato, Palladius; in short out of all the best and purest Roman Authors. In using the Assistances mention'd, we did not take every, nay scarce any Word, any Signification or Construction of a word, upon trust; but the way we took to make these Great Mens Labours useful to us was this: They seldom omit naming not only the Author, but the Place in him, whence they fetch their Authorities. This is known to be Stephens's method, and the same may be seen in Mr. Milton's Manuscript, by the Curious or Doubtful. Having therefore received this General Direction from them, wherewith we soon became well acquainted by often turning the Books they quote, we had recourse to the very passages in the Authors; in doing whereof, how much pains soever it might cost us, we are sure we have satisfy'd our selves, and have, we hope, done right to our Reader and them. Lastly, the Compleat Indices generally annext to the Dauphine Editions of most of the Roman Writers, (some of which we had by us, and others we had free and constant recourse to) were also very useful and serviceable to us. We would not be supposed to commend all the Attempts made in those Dauphine Editions; tho we judg some of them to be great Performances, amongst which number Pliny's Natural History (that Store-house of the Roman Tongue) put forth by Harduin, deserves the first place. But our meaning is, their compleat Indices were of great use to us. For all the places being mentioned and directed to in every Author, wherein any Word occurs, by looking out and considering those places, (tho that was a Work of vast pains and labour) we became able, not only to improve our own Attempt, but in many instances to correct and polish those of our Predecessors. And whoever shall vouchsafe to go on with this great Undertaking, (for we won't pretend to have gone through all its parts compleatly, some of the Hands employ'd about it having had a stop put to them by Death, and others diverted by Employments of a different nature;) will find the course we have thus far proceeded in, to be most useful and certain to the Reader, how laborious soever it may be in it self.

Having told the Reader whence we fetch'd our Materials, we come now to shew him in what Order we have distributed them for his readier use and better satisfaction.

All Primitive Words, such as Novus, Nox, &c. being the Heads of their several Clans or Families, are printed in Capitals, by such a Mark of Honour to distinguish them from their Descendants. The Quantities of all Syllables that could be supposed doubtful are carefully marked by this Note [˘] to shew their shortness, and by this [-] their length. The Quality or kind, whether Noun, Adverb, &c. is scarce any where omitted. The Hebrew and Greek Terms, wherever they could be found answering the Latine, are inserted. Words manifestly of a Greek Extract are shewn by a Star *. But we have turned out all those Words purely Greek, that others before us had put into this Alphabet, which we could not find naturalized by any Latine Author, and dress in a Roman Garb; it being our business to compile compile a Latin Dictionary, not a Greek Lexicon. And such Words as are either Obsolete, and not being to be met with in any Latin Author; or, tho occurring in Classic Authors, were yet adjudged unfit for School-Use, are noted with an Obelisk, †. Most of these little Distinctions we found made use of before; and judging them of use to Learners, thought fit to continue them, without offence (we hope) to the Learned. But that which follows, is of a concern more material and considerable. It may be reduced to these Three Heads; the Etymon, Signification, and Use or Construction of each Word, whereto the whole Nature of Speech is reducible. We shall speak distinctly of all these, that the Reader may have a clearer Notion of what he is to expect from this Performance.

To be well acquainted with the true Etymology of words is certainly a very necessary Piece of Knowledge, because it not only conduces much to our understanding their Meaning, but imprints the Sense of them in our Minds and Memories. For which Reasons we have never been wanting in our Accounts of this sort, tho we are not so profuse and lavish in them as others that have gone before us, who seem to cloy the Reader with all those ridiculous and decried Derivations, invented and furnished by Varro, Isidore, Perottus, &c. which Authors make it their Business to fetch all Latin Words almost from some Roman Original; whereas it appears past doubt to any considering Man, that the Romans were beholden in some measure to the Hebrew, but in a far greater to the Greek Tongue, for the Copiousness of their own Language. Instead therefore of repeating four or five strained and far-fetched Etymons, (for so many are to be seen under some Words) we have set down one or two only, which we judged most agreeable to the measures of Analogy, generally adding the Authors Names shortened whence we had them, as Varr. for Varro, Voss. for Vossius, and Ltt. for D. Littleton.

In giving the Signification of Words, we have not thrown them all together in a heap, which was the usual way before us; but have put them into distinct Apartments or Sections, always giving that Sense of the Word the first place, which we found deserved it; the rest having their Subsistence and Dependence from that, and therefore for Decency and good Manners sake ought to follow it. And where ever the English Word is manifestly beholden to the Latin one for its Derivation, that is printed in Black Letters, to render it more visible, and consequently to imprint it deeper on the Memory. Nor is the English given for the Latin so numerous as before, whereby the Readers Memory was surfeited rather than satisfied, and the true Notion of the Word often confounded. But we have mentioned those Significations only, and no more, which we found warranted by the Authors we consulted; some of whose Names abbreviated we always add, but not always their very words; which we have inserted in such Cases as these only, when the Word or Sense of it was wholly new, that is, never taken notice of in a Work of this nature before, of which sort several hundred Instances occur; and when our Author's Expression contained some Phrase or Idiom of Speech, some Definition, Etymology, or something that was either Critical or Grammatical. And in giving Authorities or Examples, we usually confine our selves to Three, and those the shortest; unless the thing treated of be new, or has some some time been controverted; or unless the very Example brought out of the Author has heretofore been wrested by others.

Government or Construction of Words is as essential to the Writing any Language, as the Significations of them are to the understanding it. This Regiment appears more visible in Verbs, than in any other Parts of Speech; for which reason we have been larger in our Accounts of them; wherein we have so managed the Matter, as at the same time to shew both the Grammatical Government of the Word treated of, and likewise the Latin Propriety or Phrase. To prove what we say to be true, we will instance in the Verb Oro, under the third signification of this Word, which is, I beg, entreat or desire, we first shew its Use with several Moods, as a Subjunctive, an Imperative, and an Infinitive; then, how 'tis used with different Cases, as with an Ablative, with an Accusative as well of the Person as of the Thing, with a Dative, with an Ablative and a Preposition, and lastly, with a double Accusative: All which Constructions we prove by the Authorities of the best Authors, as Plautus, Terence, Tully, Virgil, &c. The same is or Method in all other Verbs, and Words whatever, whose Construction is various; only this we would have our Readers observe, that where the same Regiments occur under different Significations of the same Word, we have given Examples under the first Signification only; contenting our selves barely to name those Constructions under the following Senses of that Word, and to add the Authors Names, without inserting their Words.

To make the more room for these useful Materials that this Work might not too much exceed the Volume it was extant in before, which it does not by above fifteen Sheets; we were forced to take great pains in removing that Rubbish, which some others, with no less Labour perhaps, had brought together; designing their Collections, as we think, for a common Laystal of Barbarism, rather than for a Latin-Classic Dictionary. Besides therefore the fore-mentioned numerous and nauseous Etymologies, we turn'd out all Words and Phrases, whose Authors were either not to be found, or, when found, appear'd in so barbarous and uncouth a Dress, as made them very unfit Company for Tully, Cæsar, Virgil, Horace, and the other Romans of the first Quality; to whom they would likewise have been both unintelligible and uneasie, as being the Corrupters and Debauchers of that noble Language, which the others have refin'd, and taken so much pains to transmit to them in its Purity and Lustre. Of this sort are those Terms coin'd by the School-men, Canonists, Modern Philosophers, &c. to which we have assign'd a particular place, namely, the Latin Barbarous Class, where he that has a mind to foul his Fingers, may find them. This Separation we saw to be not only possible, but necessary, especially for Boys, whom we have found by experience, in their turning other Dictionaries, wherein this Distinction is not observ'd, often to leave the Gold, and take the Dross, that is, neglect the pure Latin Words, and even pick out for use the Barbarous. Another Course we took for gaining room was this, in Passives, Participles, and Degrees of Comparison, we have referr'd the Reader to their Actives, Verbs, Nouns, Participles, and Adverbs; unless the Goodness of the Author, or Singularity of the Example perswaded to the contrary.

contrary. We also struck out, as always useless, and often impertinent, all Latin Explications of Words made by late Writers; and either remov'd or shorten'd the English Repetitions of those Latin Explications which had been taken out of the Ancients; as likewise all Repetitions occasion'd by the different Spelling or Writing the same Word, all Phrases put in improper places, all Interpretations of Phrases judg'd unnecessary, and lastly, all Proper Names not Metonymically us'd. And whereas there are several Words which come from Proper Names, we left them to be treated of under their Originals, with this Reference [Vid. Propr.] made thither from the Appellatives; by which means we thought, one would cast a Light upon the other, the Plant would be remembred for its Products sake, and the Product would be the rather acknowledg'd, because it was found at home.

Poetry is known to have a Set of Words peculiar to her Court, which we have distinguish'd by a Flower [✻] plac'd before them. We judg'd such a Distinction very beneficial to Youth, who are apt to use one instead of the other, as Flumen for Fluvius, Musa for Carmen, Fons for Puteus, Unda for Aqua, Lumen for Oculus, &c. besides that, such a Difference shews the Excellency of Poetry, and displays its Finery and Court-like Garniture, when compar'd with the plain, tho comely Dress of downright Prose.

The Observation of Synonyma's, or Terms of a like Sense, and of Antitheta's, of those of a contrary Meaning, is doubtless of great use in finding out the true Value and force of Words; and therefore we have carefully noted them also with peculiar Marks, the former thus =, and the latter in this manner ✕.

Having said so much of the foregoing parts of this Work, tho not more than we have really done in them; to make the Reader amends, we will be shorter in our Accounts of the following.

The things we chiefly design'd in the Latin-Proper Dictionary, were Geography, History, and the Fictions of the Poets. Our main Care in the Geographical Part has been, to give the New or Modern Names of Countries, Cities, &c. under those which had been put on them by the Ancients, especially the Romans: A Catalogue of which latter the Reader has in English-Latin also, in an Alphabet by themselves, subjoyn'd to the English-Latin Dictionary. We have not been so large in our Historical Accounts, as we had Precedents for, from Stephanus, and those who follow him in that Collection; but generally speaking have confin'd our selves to that Compass set us by Latin-Classic Authors; tho where-ever the Matter was either very considerable, or the Instance afforded any useful or pleasing Knowledge, we took the Liberty of exceeding those Bounds. The more eminent Names, both of Places and Persons, be they Hebrew, Greek, or Latin, have the preeminence given them of Capital Letters. That wherein our Care has been more particular in this part of the Work, is, The Poetick Fictions; whereto we were induced, partly, because they are of so great use for understanding many Passages in the eminentest Greek and Latin Poets, and partly in regard such Stories as those are in some Schools made use of as Exercises to be put into Latin by the Scholars.

The Reader has had a Hint already of what he may expect in the Latin-Barbarous Part, and therefore we shall only add here; here, that tho we have not rank'd together all that Stuff, which old musty Glossaries would have furnish'd us with, (a Course which must have made our Volume too Bulky, and consequently less useful to those for whom 'tis chiefly design'd) yet we have not been wanting in our Industry for an Improvement here also. If a larger heap of this Rubbish be desired, Du Fresne is as easie to be had, as his Loads of it are large. The Terms of Chymists, those especially of the Paracelsian Way, are not so much as mentioned here; which no considering Man will call an Omission, because they are wholly foreign to the Latin Tongue. And besides, to speak the plain Truth out all at once, as we pretend not to understand this Cant, so neither (we believe) do the Coiners of it themselves, by whom we suppose it to have been invented for Amusement, rather than Use.

Next to the Latin-Barbarous Alphabet, follows one of old Common-Law Words in Latin-English also. This Part of the Work has receiv'd very great Improvements from a Learned Gentleman of the Long Robe; and its Usefulness is own'd by the Whole Body of that Honorable Profession, and must be also acknowledg'd by all other Men of Letters, who do not think Spelman, Cowel, &c. Triflers in their Laborious Performances.

Lastly, the whole Work is clos'd with a Brief and Methodical Account of the Weights, Coins, and Measures in use amongst the Romans; together with their Abbreviations in their Writings, Inscriptions, and Monuments.

Perhaps the Reader will think this short Account we have given of our Performances, wearisome and tedious. If its Perusal appears so to him, the Writing it must needs have been really so to us. And much more the great Pains we have taken throughout all the Parts of this useful Work; so we will call it, how forward soever some may be in censuring the Authors, or others backward in putting a due Value on what they have done. Of which Labours they only can have a true Sense, who have been actually concerned in them. That Description of these Pains, is as ingenious as 'tis true, comprised by Joseph Scaliger in the Epigram he wrote, after he had made an Index to Gruter's Inscriptions; which in kindness we will give the Reader into his Bargain, and so take leave.
